Advisory Action Before the Filing of an Appeal Brief

Part of Paper No. 20070104

Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: The proposed amendments do not overcome the 112, 1st paragraph, scope of enablement rejection and insufficient written description rejection. Applicants' arguments have been fully considered and are not persuasive. The specification does not reasonably provide enablement for a method for the prophylaxis of a HIV infection in a human subject. Applicants allege that Examiner's citation, Jefferys (2005), demonstrates that the macaque model can be predictive. Applicants apparently have misconstrued the citation. The fact that a trail HIV vaccine showed promising amount of immune response in a monkey model was only mariganly immunogenic in humans spoorts Examiner's point of the high level of unpredictability in direct extrapolation from the macaque model to human. Applicants themselves agreed that the claimed antiviral compounds do not comprise an antien stimulating the immune system, which is unclear how the claimed oligonuleotides can prevent HIV infection in a subject. Applicants additionally cited excerpts from MPEP and the teachings of Silvera et al. (2000), Van Rompay et al. (2001), Hofman et al. (2004), Yoshimura et al. (2003) and North et al. (2005), which all present results of investigation drugs solely for treatment of HIV infection. None of the references teaches or fairly suggests the predictive value of primate models for HIV vaccine or prophylaxis. The specification does not sufficiently describe the genus of oligonucleotides that are at least 30 nucleotides in length, which encompasses 1.1 x 10E18 variants. The list of 26 nucleotides and 19 randomers do represent the entire genus. It is critical to provide substantial evidence and factual findings in the specification for an unpredictable art such as HIV vaccine in humans. The specification is remiss of these requirements and hence, the rejections are maintained.
